“Dad, I remember most the stories you would share with me about your dad and your boy hood. Seems like just yesterday when we were engaged in laughter about past memories. Now that it is Christmas time, I am recalling the huge candy canes you would bring for each one of us. I remember on Christmas Eve you would come home from a hard days work and mom had a nice hot meal waiting for you. We would all gather around the table to watch you eat because we knew once you finished we could open up our presents under the tree. Those were probably the longest minutes of my life! I will miss you this Christmas and forever! Come horse race season for the triple crown, I will pick a horse for you to win! We bet a lot of horses throughout the year, but I know you will be with me when I select the winning horse! May you rest in peace and share moments in God's kingdom where you'll live forever, and ever! Say hi to Mom and Tony Boy for me.
